Laki Of Iran

POPULATION 1.2 Million

The Laki [LAH-kee] people live in western Iran and speak their own language, different from Farsi. They were once a nomadic people. But most Laki tribes have now settled into towns and cities. The Iranian government encourages Laki assimilation into the majority culture through compulsory education that's only available in Farsi. The Laki, however, still speak their own language at home. They practice Shia Islam, along with the majority population. A few gospel recordings are available in the Laki language, and a handful of Laki in Iran have come to faith in Christ.
